HARDING'S HOME COMING.

Perhaps the most impressive and significant picture in the art gallery in the Chicago Exposition of 1893 was a small painting entitled "Breaking Home Ties." Crowds moved to tears by tender memories, stood for hours before it. It touched the heart strings, and typified the moving force of America—home.

When John Howard Payne, in a far off land, wrote of "Home Sweet Home" he touched the mighty chord that swells into the chorus of the Union.

When Senator Warren G. Harding stood before his friends and neighbors in his own home town, when he permitted his memory to picture the scenes of long ago, when his heart was touched by the kindly and wholesome scenes of home, he typified all that is best, and all that is hopeful in America.

The home-coming of Senator Harding's was a sign of the home-coming of the Nation, after several years wandering in strange pastures, after being led into alien paths and afflicted by strange and perilous experiments.

The American Republic has been away from home, and seeking an American, listening to voices in the air, and seeing things unreal and unwholesome. It has been led into the swamps of internationalism and foreign entanglements. It has been intoxicated by "good obligations," "spiritual leadership" and "social government."

Senator Harding's home-coming is the first real sign of the Nation's home-coming. In simple words, in touching language, the leader of the Republican party tells his own home folks that "government is not of supermen but of normal men, very much like you and me."

The Senator's simple and telling words told the story of patriotism, when he said of the town of Marion: "We all played the game together, because it was our game." It is a waste of God's rich endowments to assail and destroy when all the flowers of life bloom best in the soil of sympathy and encouragement.

This is the spirit of optimistic loyalty to country, to America. It is a superb definition of patriotism. It is the keynote to Senator Harding's life, now opened before the American people. Is it not an inspiration?

Pointing to his own home town and its wonderful growth, the Senator said: "No superman did it, no one man did it. Now make the application. This wonderful land of ours is but the aggregate of communities, and the necessary harmony and purpose must be in council, in the wisdom of plural leadership, not in the glory of supermen."

Here is our guide for future activity as a nation. Here is the beacon leading to a safe harbor. Here is the great lesson to the home-coming of Senator Harding. It breathes the spirit of union, it tells the story of America, it signifies the home-coming of a mislead and misguided Republic.

MEXICO AGAIN.

Those of us who have been reading about Mexico for the last twenty years, the looting and atrocities committed there, heaved a big sigh of relief when, after the murder of Carranza, things below the border became reasonably quiet and events gave promise of the forming of a stable government with a fixed policy. We have read with interest that Villa was surrounded and, while accepting the claim with a grain of salt, have confidently hoped that it might be true. Nothing would please the average American more than to see Villa strung to the highest tree in Mexico.

But our bubble of hope for stability in Mexico has been exploded. Three hundred rebels attacked Nuevo Laredo, near the border, on Thursday, an attack claimed to be but the forerunner of another reign of terror.

Mexico has been ignored in the newspaper headlines for more than two months, and Mexico feels it is being slighted, and, if necessary, is willing to start another revolution to regain her lost notoriety.

BRING BACK OUR ONE O' CAT.

One o' cat is not baseball, a court has ruled. Of course not. One o' cat is an entirely different pastime which, if our memory has not faded entirely, necessitates the batter being a Babe Ruth at every trip to the plate. Nevertheless, there was a time in the lives of most of us that one o' cat was considered the greatest of outdoor sports. If only those sand lot days could be brought back to us in reality. The memory of them is cherished and most of us heave a sigh as we recall those barefoot boyhood days. We wonder sometimes does Young America of this generation do the things that we used to do—does the boy of today play one o' cat? From our observations of the boy of today at play we are inclined to doubt it. He plays baseball but not one o' cat.

Gad! Does he know what he is missing?

The government order permitting trade with Russia reminds us of a bootleg deal. We trade with the bootlegger but we do not "recognize" him.

"Liquids," says a postoffice department announcement, "will be accepted for transmission by parcel post between Martinique and the United States." If prohibition isn't in effect there we may be able to get some liquid inspiration from Martinique.

RESIGNATION IS NOT ACCEPTED

Chinese Cabinet Officer is Anxious to Quit But President Is Unwilling

(Correspondence of Associated Press) PEKING, June 21. A striking example of the official cooking the man, an official resignation line, is afforded by the present cabinet situation. Premier Chin Yung-ping, who became premier of the "China" political faction after the death of former president Feng Yuxiang, wants to resign his post but the President won't let him.

The astounded person of his desire to go to the difficulty, the government finds in financing itself. The cabinet is said to be found in a cabinet which is in progress between the "China" and "Anti" factions, the latter being the military group.

For the third time the Premier has tendered his resignation and three times the President has refused to accept it. The Premier is said to be a devotee of the "China" faction, being both a non-extension of the leave in the military. Admiral Sui Cheng-ping, minister of the navy, is a devotee of the "China" faction.

Major political maneuvering is going on under the surface and at the moment it is regarded as probable that Chin Yung-ping will eventually resign his post possibly with some changes in the cabinet upon which he is said to be insisting.

OPEN RICH ORE ON LONE STAR

GOLDFIELD, July 16.—To George Meull, a traveling pocket hunter from the Mother Lode country in California, goes the credit for finding a high-grade orebody, 60 feet from the surface in Goldfield at this late day. Meull has opened in the Lone Star a six to nine-inch width of ore that has had an average value of $15 for a distance of 12 feet and the ore is strong in the face of the drift.

IN KAISER'S RESIDENCE

(Correspondence Associated Press) BERLIN, July 1. In the Berlin Schloss, the former Emperor's William's town residence on the banks of the Spree, is now installed the Psychological Institute of the University of Berlin. Scaffolding is still up, and workmen are busily re-building the front, which was badly scarred in part by machine gun fire at the time of the revolution.
